resurfacing knee. The Omnifit knee system is an anatomically shaped femoral component that incorporates a thin polyethylene plastination insert and a metal backing for the patella and tibial polyethylene insert.
The system is designed for femoral component fixation with optional soft-tissue balancing, patellofemoral arthroplasty, and management of arthritis. During the past 3 years, there have been 27 Omnifit knee implants performed at The Joint Surgery Center of Oregon. Twenty-seven patients have completed a minimum of 6 months' follow-up evaluation, with an average follow-up of 25 months (range, 6 to 46). Twenty-three patients underwent patellofemoral arthroplasty for a variety of patellofemoral pathologies. Ten patients underwent hemiarthroplasty (7 for osteonecrosis and 3 for patellofemoral arthritis). Five patients had stemmed patellar component resurfacing arthroplasty (3 for osteonecrosis and 2 for patellofemoral arthritis). Three patients underwent condylar resurfacing with synovectomy, and 1 patient underwent combined condylar resurfacing and synovectomy. The remaining 3 patients had patellofemoral arthroplasty with soft-tissue balancing for management of arthritis. All patients had substantial pain relief, achieving an average pain score of 1.56 (range, 0 to 4) at the 6-month follow-up evaluation. The average Western Ontario and McMaster Universities Arthritis Index score improved from 35.45 (range, 0 to 93) preoperatively to 50.09 (range, 0 to 95) at follow-up evaluation ($P = .0004$). The average flexion improved from 96.83 degrees (range, 20 to 125 degrees) preoperatively to 121.83 degrees (range, 20 to 130 degrees) postoperatively ($P = .0025$). The extensor mechanism function was unchanged in all patients. There were no significant complications.
