Now, for the first time, FIFA players can experience a match on and off the pitch from a wide variety of perspectives. The player movement of the players in the match is recorded in each stadium in the stadium suite. Players can be tracked in-game through the scenes using the on-pitch camera or through a map that shows where the player's movements are on the pitch. Off-the-pitch, players can be tracked through the stadiums using a camera in their suites, or on the pitch using the on-pitch cameras, which can identify when players leave and re-enter the field of play. The tracking data from players off the pitch in the stadium is also used to create the new "On-Field Analysis" feature in the coach and player management. The inclusion of off-pitch player tracking has been carefully designed to achieve a balance between realism and accessibility. The technology enables players, coaches and analysts to experience unique new features and the complete game but keep the data generated through the tracking process to a minimum. The technologies can be used in all modes across a range of new features, including "FIFA Ultimate Team", "FIFA Ultimate Team Seasons" and the new video and motion-capture options in The Journey and Career games. Steps can now be shared off the pitch as well as on, with players receiving an invitation to share a match with friends or via live streaming. This provides fans with a unique insight into the world of football on and off the pitch, and will allow players to share their life away from the pitch with fans worldwide. The video player in the squad screen has been expanded to show more detailed match moments, now presenting a number of additional match-day statistics. The player ratings and the ability to compare players have also been revamped in the video player, with new help screens explaining the ratings, and the ranking of players broken down into important categories. "What's happening on the field is now available to fans through live streaming and off-pitch tracking," explained Jost. "The video coach in the squad screen, and the ability to take players out of the match at any time, makes a match feel more personal. It will allow players to tell fans what's happening in their lives - and allow them to share with their fans where they are and what they are doing away from
