Photoshop Elements is now called Photoshop Express. It's not a standalone product. You need to buy the Photo Shop Ultimate Standard software (which you can do for a nominal fee at the Apple website; see the sidebar for details) to use Photoshop Elements. There are numerous tools and functions within Photoshop. This book covers the most common and important tools, so in the following sections, I focus primarily on that subset of tools. For more specifics on each tool, check out the book's author-shot tutorial (`www.pearson.com/go/your-library/photoshop-extended`) to become more familiar with the tool. (For tips on other tools, see Chapter 5 in this minibook.) We begin the discussion of Photoshop by showing you how to create a layer from an image. Next, we move on to the many non-layers categories of editable objects: layers, type, shapes, and filters. We start this section with the first topic we cover: layers, the building blocks of a photo. Photoshop elements: A layered review By contrast with the many variants of other image-manipulation programs, Photoshop Elements is an image-editing application created especially for folks who want to manipulate digital photographs. It emphasizes ease of use and one-click access to tools. Photoshop Elements comes in several different editions — some costing as much as $80 or $100 a year — depending on whether it is included in Adobe's subscription to Creative Suite. In addition to Elements, the suite includes Adobe Illustrator, Adobe Acrobat, and Adobe Flash. The lower-priced Individual subscription is much less expensive and doesn't include Acrobat or Flash. Photoshop Elements provides you with the most common basic editing tools: Filters: There are two types of filters: global and local. Global filters affect the appearance of the entire image, whereas local filters affect only the pixels that are under the filter tool. Brushes: A brush is a tool that enables you to easily paint with a digital brush, blending colors or textures from one pixel to another. Tools: You use these tools to modify the appearance of an image — for example, crop it, add text, recolor objects, and so on. Adjustments: These tools enable you to modify the color, brightness, contrast, and clarity of an image. Layers: Layers are the basic building blocks of a photo. (

Jan 15, 2017; St. Louis, MO, USA; San Francisco 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick (7) celebrates after throwing a touchdown pass against the St. Louis Rams during the second half at the Edward Jones Dome. The 49ers won 20-13. Mandatory Credit: Scott Rovak-USA TODAY Sports The San Francisco 49ers are not going to win the Super Bowl next year. It just won't happen. The offseason is done and the real work is about to begin. Training camp is right around the corner. This leaves me time to look at my 2017 NFL Draft rankings, which is always an interesting exercise. I didn't rank players until this season as I thought it might be beneficial to see where I actually think players are going to be ranked next season. Until this year, I didn't rank players until I was almost completely set with the draft board, but that is changing this year. Let's take a look at the 49ers 2017 NFL Draft board as we know it. Tier One Quarterback: A.J. McCarron, Alabama – Throw for throw, there is not a better player at this position Running Back: Dalvin Cook, Florida State – The proven stud from Florida State will run through his opposition and possibly help your quarterback look better than he does in a regular season setting Wide Receiver: DeAndre Hopkins, Clemson – One of the best receivers in the entire class. I don't think that he'll be an immediate starter, but he'll be a weapon for the niners for years to come Tier Two Center: Billy Price, Ohio State – A lot of these offensive line spots can be interchangeable. Price is too good to pass up Top Tackle: Connor Williams, Texas Guard: Wes Martin, Notre Dame – If you look at his career at Notre Dame, he has been a better passer blocker than a run blocker. I do think he'll be a better passer blocker than a run blocker, but it's not a certainty Defensive Tackle: Vita Vea, Washington – I couldn't decide between this guy and Taven Bryan, but the gap between these two is very small Top Linebacker: Roquan Smith, Georgia Corner: Quincy Wilson, Florida – A lot of these top 50 players are all very similar in terms of their college
