Video Review Fan's Walkthrough Video Trailer Video Trailer Audio Trailer Music Character Progression Why you'd want to play it: This is one of the few works in recent memory that almost makes me appreciate the current state of gaming, where we don't have true cross-platform high quality games like The Legend of Zelda: Majora's Mask and Twilight Princess because they look really old-school and they were obviously made on 8-bit technology. Did they look like the video game equivalent of a brick-and-mortar (my favorite Disney movies) because they had to be made on that little technology? No. They looked like high-res anime because that's what animation movies looked like. The fact they looked old-school and looked like they belonged to the early '90s was completely incidental. A Rite from the Stars isn't like that. It looks like a modern game, has an interesting story, and somehow manages to stay authentic to the Disney flick that inspired it. Retro console games are notoriously unattractive, but A Rite from the Stars is still relatively attractive to look at, despite it being sprite-based. It looks good and it works on a controller, the Wii's controller at that. There's not much else you need to know about it — it's a game you either love or you hate. The game feels small, but maybe that's because the game's narrative is small. You follow one plotline, that of the story of a small boy and a dog. The boy has an old Nintendo Entertainment System and an old television at home, the TV has a picture that's out of focus, and the game is the only thing to play on the console. The boy plays in his room, and the dog plays outside, away from the boy and the television. They play, and they play, and they play, for a long time, until they meet a girl. An innocent and cute girl with long hair who loves playing video games as much as he does. He and the girl share the television and they play together, and they play, and they play, and they play. Eventually, the boy and the girl fall in love, and there are memories made, and there are tears in the eyes. The storyline is a Disney movie, so it's a little obvious, but it's still a really good Disney movie

What's new:

($37, Comixology) Following on from the heels of Kick-Ass, writer/artist Frank Miller's unofficial doctor Nuke looks set to muscle his way onto the world stage with the supernatural tale of Dracula VS The Ninja On The Moon, a must-have 20-page preview for any fan of supernatural or historical fiction. "Dracula VS The Ninja On The Moon" will be one of publisher Dark Horse's live gameday tie-in co-illustrated editions, with DHC editor Gabe Eltaeb penning the prose and longtime Miller collaborator Ron Garney providing the creative coda for the action. The back-up story is by colorist Mark Morales, and will be one of many pre-existing stories Dark Horse uses in this two-part event. Below, you'll get an exclusive first look at the comic's cover artwork, as well as some insights from Miller about crafting a tale set in a common mythos we all know and love. I have it on good authority that you're not. You are. You're not! Okay, now you are. No, I'm not! I see you. Yes! No! You're just like me. Okay, okay, just calm down. I am calm. It's more fun to play that way. I am. No, you're talking in riddles! That's true, I am. Oh! An anagram! No, no, no! That's too hard! Oh! It's not an anagram if you get it! Yes it is. No it isn't. Yes it is. No! You're just shifting them around! No I'm not. Yes you are. No I'm not. It's not a math-block! That's true, you're right. I am. Oh, yes. I'm just helping with your defense. Thank you, but I have this part down. Then how did you get in trouble! I didn't get in trouble. That's not true. Yes it is. No it isn't. I'm speaking in riddles again!

Q: How do I compute the shortest possible (best) join of two binary strings? Can someone help me with this problem? I've tried thinking for hours, but I just can't figure it out. Let $H(N,M)$ be the number of ways to join N strings of length M into a single string with 1 's and 0 's such that the resulting string is the shortest. In other words, given two binary strings of equal length, can I build the shortest possible string using only 1 's and 0 's? A: Let $H(n, m)$ be the number of ways to join n strings of length m into a single string with 1 's and 0 's. Then for every binary string s of length n , the longest element of the binary string \overline{s} of length n is $\overline{s} = s \circ \overline{s} \circ \overline{s} \circ \overline{s} \cdots \circ \overline{s}$. Therefore, $H(n, m) = \prod_{i=1}^n H(i, m)$. If s is any binary string of length n , then the shortest string \overline{s} of length n has a length that is at most $\frac{n-1}{\log(n)}$ because $H(n, m)$ is monotonically decreasing in m . Thus, $H(n, m)$ is maximized when m is a little less than $\frac{n-1}{\log(n)}$.
