At least seven people have been killed and 14 more wounded in a mass shooting at a Sikh temple in suburban Milwaukee on Sunday morning. A gunman opened fire inside a nondenominational temple on the city's south side, the Associated Press reported. Footage from local news channels showed the gunman standing inside the temple's ballroom and firing shots into a crowd of congregants as they were in the midst of a morning prayer service. "He walked inside and opened fire," said John Iosifidis, vice president of a Christian church next to the temple, who said he was inside. "There was a big bad boom and then people started running." Iosifidis added that he thought the shooter fired only one round, and that the noise sent him to the basement to seek cover. Iosifidis said police arrived at the temple in about five minutes, and members were "scared to death." He said the gunman, whom he saw wearing a red shirt and no mask, also went into the basement where he reloaded his gun. Police spent about 30 minutes at the temple, and said they didn't have any suspects yet. An officer said there were no hostages. "It looks like they [the police] tried to end that situation, they tried everything they could to stop the attack before it happened," the officer said. "We have no idea why it happened. We're just glad that Palladium-catalyzed arylation of pentafluoroacetyl derivatives of naphthalene. Pentafluoroacetyl derivatives of naphthalene readily undergo palladium-catalyzed arylation reaction with aryl halides to afford diarylated naphthalenes in good to high yields. The scope and limitations of this reaction with respect to aryl halides and arylation conditions are reported. The arylation reaction is a short, straightforward, and atom-economic method for the preparation of diarylated naphthalenes from readily available pentafluoroacetyl naphthalenes. Insulin uptake (1/2-3 d): in vivo ligand concentration ranges, insulin clearance, and receptor affinities. Specific insulin binding to hepatic and splanchnic insulin receptors has been investigated in the rat by the measurement of the in vivo (1-3 d) uptake of tracer amounts of 125I-labelled insulin. The ligand concentration ranges in liver and muscle during this period were calculated from the rate of uptake of 125I-insulin under various conditions (high affinity binding to the receptor, receptor blockade, receptor blockade plus cold insulin, and the effect of insulin on hepatic insulin extraction). The results support the view that the tissue concentrations of insulin in the physiological range are quite low (ca. 100 pM). However, the mean hepatic concentrations during the initial phase of the uptake period (1/2-3 d) appear to be above the range observed in the plasma, suggesting an accumulation of insulin in liver as a result of receptor-mediated processes. In general, the liver appears to be capable of a marked accumulation of insulin by receptor-mediated processes. Insulin binding to the receptor was maximal within 60 min of i.v. injection and declined slightly thereafter. A second injection of labelled insulin resulted in an increase in the rate of uptake, indicating that the receptor is in a state of occupancy with endogenous ligand. The in vivo data can be used to estimate the affinity of the receptor for insulin (K_d, 10(-9) M). Arielle Hossman wrote: >> I'm trying to figure out what I'm doing wrong.
