[PYOGUEY] [General] It's certainly lovely to see more games using the Vita hardware as a powerful, practical RPG system. And I'd give to the Vita an A or B for its portable power. Not just being able to take the game with you, but the simple pleasure of being able to see what you're up to in a new location. Gameplay-wise, I have to give the game a B. I think that most people would say that it's a rare, but I'd take it over A. If I had to give it the highest rating I could, I would give it an A+ or A++, because it's one of those games that you can enjoy even if you only make the attempt once. It's a bit more aimed at being a love story than a traditional RPG, but it manages to be fun nonetheless. Even if you only play it once, you will have fun picking up the game and playing it, and there's a bit more depth than what I'm used to when it comes to the setting and the characters, so it's still a pretty fun experience. The game is full of depth and fun. I'd agree that playing the game for the first time is pretty fun and rewarding, and that, all in all, I would say that it's at least worth a look. Full-Scale Campaign Measurement Using the Fair Area Distribution Model
By Yuta Iida

Previous articles have introduced the concept of the Incubator Unit as an intuitive tool for measuring the size of T-shaped networks and the Fair Area as a unit which organizes traffic to and from large T-shaped networks in ways that lend themselves to easy comparisons to determine fair traffic proportions.

We've also looked at the Internet Engineering Task Force's Request for Comments (RFC)7598, which provides an analysis of RTP, Real-Time Transport Protocol, which allows for the accurate measurement of bandwidth used for real-time applications, and proposed an improved method that involves only the minimal amount of exchange of Internet traffic data.

I want to share a demo of a software tool that will become available in the near future and introduce the unit of measure that is associated with the tool.

1) Fair Generation Automata

The unit of measure is called the 'Fair Generation Automaton.' You can think of this as a program that operates within the network.
