Q: Hyper-V client (Exchange 2010) not working I have a client who has an Exchange 2010 server running, and has had it running fine for over a year, with no problems at all. Up until this week, the user was able to connect to the server using Outlook 2010. Last week, I installed the Hyper-V virtualization client on the user's PC, and it installed fine. However, since I did this, he can't connect to his Exchange server at all. If I leave the Hyper-V client installed, the user can't connect to his server, and if I remove it and then install it again, the user can't connect to his server. If I try and connect to the server directly, the server returns a message that says that the connection has been refused by the Hyper-V server. I've looked all over the web and can't figure out why this is happening, and have only managed to get the server to work once via Hyper-V since installing it.

Any ideas as to what's happening? Regards, Roo A: The issue was fixed by re-installing the Hyper-V client. In order to speed up the process, I am using paralellism. If the process takes 60 seconds to run, it works as expected. If the process takes 13 minutes to run, it will take a few minutes to load. Is there a way to delay the execution for the second thread until the first has exited? A: The original source for QProcess has a separate ptimeslot parameter which controls how many times a process can execute in
