Ask HN: If you had discovered a new artifact or technology would you be first to it? - sazorov While the new map of the human genome was very well-known and was released earlier this year to the public, it just reminded me, that I want to make sure the new technologies that I find are always the first. I want to be the first to find. Do you have the same aspirations? For example, I just found out, that I can do non-electronic water purification using water electrolysis. (Duh, I know, but I'm wondering if you know it). What are your aspirations to make discoveries? ===== dullgiulio Most probably not. I'm happy to be the first one that doesn't forget to invent it. Of course this is a different perspective, but I feel it is the correct way to approach life. ~~~ sazorov I guess most people will agree. But for some people it's a different story, because they just want to be first for "everything". They say "If you see it, make it yours" ~~~ dullgiulio Indeed. That is why most people are also not first. I think the goal of "making it yours" is a noble one, but it is mostly for inspiration. Q: Preventing the creation of nested collection views when using selectors I have two collection views, and I am using a selector to respond to nested collections of items within the second view. When this selector is executed, nested collections are created. I've tried to suppress this behavior, but my collection view keeps telling me it has 1 views with an enormous number of views. This is causing my UI to take a really long time to load. If there is a way to suppress this behavior, without using filters, I'd love to hear it. Otherwise, is there a way to fix

SUMMARY FIFA Football 22 brings an unprecedented number of ways to play the beautiful game for both fans and players. A new channel name for the electrospray ion source: the thermal field desorption electrospray ion source. The electrospray ion source (ESI) is a well-established and widely used ionization technique in MS. Although the electrospray process produces an excellent spray cone from a liquid ESI source, the process is very sensitive to the liquid flow rate, the voltage that is applied to the tip, and other factors. The recent appearance of a thermal field desorption (TFD) ion source has generated renewed interest in the field of electrospray ion sources. The TFD ion source relies on the desorption of analytes from a heated surface with the use of a focused pulsed gas jet or plume. Thus, the thermal energy is the only variable parameter, and thus, it is possible to control and tune the process by controlling the temperature of the desorption surface and the source parameters, such as the heated desorption area, the gas flow rate, the pressure and the duration of the desorption period. Because of the possibility of controlling all of the key parameters involved in the spray, the new TFD ion source is attractive for a variety of applications. In this study, we present a model for the thermal field desorption of ethanol from glass. Moreover, the model is used to calculate the thermal field desorption current density of the ethanol molecules from a heated surface. The model shows that the thermal field desorption process is more complex than previously appreciated and is different from other ionization methods, such as matrix-assisted laser desorption ionization (MALDI) and the electrospray. The goal of this project is to continue the development of a compact, economical, coherent ion source that can be used in a wide range of diagnostic applications. The specific aims of the program are: 1) develop a passive electrostatic ionization cell suitable for operation at pressures up to 100 atm; 2) develop a simple, low pressure ion mobility spect
