To evaluate the strength of the association between migraine and cardiovascular disease, and to identify patients in whom migraine is a risk factor for cardiovascular disease. All data were obtained from a population-based study of 18,051 subjects in which migraine was identified according to the International Classification of Headache Disorders (ICHD-II). Information on cardiovascular risk factors was obtained through a questionnaire. Of the 18,051 subjects, 5,810 (32%) had migraine. Subjects with migraine were more often men, more obese, and had a higher prevalence of hypertension, hyperlipidaemia, diabetes and ischaemic heart disease than subjects without migraine. After adjusting for sex, age, cardiovascular risk factors and other headaches, migraine was associated with cardiovascular disease and to a lesser extent with myocardial infarction, heart failure, stroke and thrombosis. After adjusting for all migraine-related factors, the association with cardiovascular disease (adjusted odds ratio [OR] 1.45) and myocardial infarction (adjusted OR 1.27) remained significant, but the association with stroke (adjusted OR 1.17), heart failure (adjusted OR 1.
