If you could just throw away your logical and rational sensibilities, you would. Or something. Anyway, here is a quick and dirty twenty two of the best "Vacation" gifs I could find. Enjoy. Bryan's did cross my mind, but I wasn't sure if that was actually how a first year college student would really look. Not that I've been an oldy or anything.Science insights from the Globe & Mail When scientists isolate tiny particles from the air we breathe, they often find them crammed with a variety of bacteria and other microbes. Now a team of researchers at the University of Maryland and the California Institute of Technology has isolated a previously unknown organism that may play an important role in making many of those microbes a part of our bodies. The new species, dubbed R. pickettii, is a type of bacteria that normally live in the human gut and on the skin. But this microbe seems to help other bacteria live in the lungs. My first thought was that the team had isolated another species of Mycobacterium, which are already known to play important roles in the lungs. But the researchers did DNA sequencing and found that they were dealing with a new type of bacterium. Mycobacterium may be able to live in the lungs because the immune system is not as effective at destroying the bacteria there as it is in the gut. Scientists have known for some time that bacteria from the gut help to form the lining of the small intestine. So it is likely that these previously unseen bacteria living in the lungs also serve some function. But exactly what this is remains unknown. That is what makes this study
