I live in a country where the days are defined by clock time, and the first and last time I have seen the sun set at 10pm was during summer, in the U.S. I have also seen it set at 10pm during winter. However, the sun rises around 6-7am in summer and around 7-8am in winter, so shouldn't the sunset occur at around 10am during the summer and at 11am during winter? A: The sun is below the horizon approximately two hours each day, when the sun is in the northern hemisphere. I am not familiar with the vernacular in the U.S., but I would guess that in a summer evening, you are also referring to the time when the sun is at or below the horizon. The sun will be below the horizon at 4 am in winter, and at 10 pm in summer. The sun may cross the horizon during summer, though this is less and less common as the day progresses. If the sun passes the line of the horizon, then you would be observing the sunset. This is rarely the case, because the horizon is not straight, and varies depending on the altitude of the observer.
