Reel Sports PlusAfter earning two silvers at the Youth Olympic Games, Livio Cavallari, 18, and his teammates decided to take a leap of faith in order to show the sporting world that he belongs with the big kids. Cavallari, who trains in Hungary and Italy, spent much of his youth traveling from European competition to Asian competition. However, he has now graduated to the World Championships in his native Italy. Well, in the past few weeks, Cavallari, who trains in Texas with the USA boxing team, has been showing flashes of his potential and signing autographs after his fights to thanks the fans for showing interest in the sport. According to Jonathan Morgan of The Guardian: "They kept telling me I'm going to get hurt. They don't know what they're talking about. I don't fear death anymore," he says. "I'm 22, I'm old enough. I know I'm too old to die. That's not the problem. I'm scared of losing. I want to win." This is one of those cases where the main issue with the sport is more about motivation and attitude. If, for example, athletes are more self-centered and arrogant, they will never develop a skill that is necessary to their existence. This story is just a shining moment in an otherwise dark sport. Check out Livio's website and let him know how much you'd like to see him fight here. We started working on this a while ago and have two more works in progress. 6d1f23a050
