One man his life to be wasted. To know more about the disease how it spreads and symptoms, read below. The US auto trade's forgotten little brother: motorbike exports Last year was the first time in eight years that the US exported more than a million bicycles in value terms - an increase of around 30% on 2007. There is little sign yet that this number will increase as dramatically next year as many expect. But it's a promising sign that motorbike sales are at their highest level since the early 1980s. That's according to the Organisation of Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Australia (OMVMA), which produces its comprehensive biannual report on the industry. This found that in 2008, 776,000 motorbikes, valued at a total of $3.5bn, were exported, down on 2007 but up on 2006 when 670,000 were exported. The most exported country in value terms was the Philippines, with a total of $800m worth of bikes being exported there last year. Australia's share was a modest $8m, while Mexico's share - already generous - rose $23m. The stats are an indication that motorbike makers may have got their act together and are now exporting bikes to the US where they were once, until some years ago, unknown. While there is still relatively little known about the US in Australia, auto exports are a major story here. Last year, there were 500,000 motor vehicles exported - a 3.8% increase on 2007, or some 3,500 vehicles per day. Seven years ago this month, we were told that the $9 billion annual global automotive trade was set to grow at an average annual rate of
